Growing demand

Increasingly people are finding that projects are a part of their professional lives. Data from the US Bureau of Economic Analysis indicates that up to 25% of total global GDP is spent on project work. To ensure the success of those investments, employers need people with the organizational and leadership skills to manage projects from concept to successful conclusion.

To ensure they stay relevant in today's job market, professionals in all walks of life are recognizing that they need to include Project Management in their toolkit of professional skills. As a result, Project Management is becoming a core course students expect their universities and academic institutions to offer.

A turnkey solution

To deliver world class education universities need partners with the subject matter expertise and real world experience to deliver the standard of education their students expect. Canadian Academic helps universities meet that need. A win for universities, students and employers, Canadian Academic provides you with access to the highest grade of materials available, access to expert tutors and a no-hassle service that allows you to introduce Project Management education without the difficulty of developing in-house course content or expertise.
